Information about consumer rights on repairs and replacements for products under warranty.

What is a manufacturer's warranty?

Suppliers or manufacturers may provide a warranty that promises consumers that: defects will entitle the consumer to repair, replacement, refund or other compensation. This is called a 'warranty against defects', or a 'manufacturer's warranty'. If you are having a dispute with the store or seller, view our Resolve your problem or complaint section.

What is a warranty against defects?

A warranty against defects deals with what the manufacturer promises to do when something goes wrong with goods. An 'express warranty' focuses on a promise or promises - for example, about what the goods will look like, will do (or are capable of doing) and for how long. However, a warranty against defects may also contain an express warranty.
